OPR at Age 75 Douglas S. Massey, Director

In 2011 the Office of Population Research (OPR) celebrated the 75th year of its existence as a demographic research center, which, to the best of my knowledge, makes it the oldest population research center in the world. OPR celebrated this momentous anniversary with a variety of activities. A special 75th Anniversary Page was added to the OPR Website (<http://opr.princeton.edu/75/>). This page contains the 75th Anniversary Documentary, the 50th Anniversary Video, and links to the OPR 75 Facebook (<http://www.facebook.com/OPR.PU>) and You Tube pages (<http://www.youtube.com/user/75OPR>).

OPR Associate Patricia Fernandez-Kelly spearheaded the effort to produce the 37-minute video documentary about the intertwined history of OPR and the field of demography. The video includes reflections by current and past OPR Directors, faculty, students, staff, and research associates about leading figures and events in the history of the Office and the role they played in advancing demographic research and training. The film debuted at a ceremonial premier held in the fall of 2011 at the Betts Auditorium in Princeton University's School of Architecture, followed by a reception with many toasts. In addition, at the 2011 Meeting of the Population Association of America, then director James Trussell hosted a reception and celebration in a ballroom of the Washington Sheraton. This was attended by many dozens of current and former students, postdocs, faculty, and friends. Alumni took the podium to reminisce about the old times and ponder the new. Students and alumni also organized a successful campaign to raise $10,000 for the Population Association of America in the name of former OPR Directors Ansley Coale and Charles Westoff, who were named "PAA Honored Members."

Looking backward at the ripe age of 75 the Office of Population Research has much to be proud of, but looking forward we see nothing but promise and excitement for the next 75 years. It is my personal privilege to have been trained at OPR as a student and postdoc, to have returned to Princeton as a faculty member in 2003, and to have been named OPR Director in 2011 (though I fear Ansley Coale may be rolling in his grave with a migration researcher at the helm of the institution he loved).
